National Rifles' Veterans Drink Silent Toasts to Former Comrades.

LIEUT. EVANS GIVES ORGANIZATION'S HISTORY

Many Honors Won by Military Company Since Its Organization in November, 1859.

GEORGE W. EVANS.

In celebrating their thirty-fourth anniversary dinner the National Rifles' Veterans last night did not forget their de ceased members and tribute was paid them in silent toasts and speeches. dinner was held at Freund's, and fifty-one veterans attended.

Promptly at 8:15 o'clock the bugle anunced the dinner call, and the veterans assembled in columns of two and marchd to the banquet hall. While they renained standing lights were ordered out the bugle sounded taps and the muffled frum rolled the requiem to the dead. In he darkness Toastmaster Lieut. George W. Evans announced that the National Rifles ever pays tribute to its dead, "now encamped on the eternal shores, brave diers, true comrades." At the concludon of this ceremony the lights were lashed and the toastmaster read the rec-ord of the past year and announced the leath of three members since the last anneath of three members since the last annual reunion, as follows:

"Fred M. Thornett, charter member, first sergeant National Rifles, June 9, 1880, to May 4, 1885, died November 19, 1913; S. Edwin Tomlinson, died November 24, 1913, and John T. Clements, died May 28, 1913.

"In the volunteer service the Naional Rifles was known as Company A. 3d Battalion, District of Columbia Volunteers. Until May 23, 1861, the company, with other District of Columbia Volunteers, was assigned duty guarding the public buildings and property in and about Washington and the approaches to the city from the south. May 23, 1861, the company, under the command of Capt. Smead, by order of Gen. Stone, U. S. A., at the head of several military organizations, crossed over the Long bridge into Virginia, and was the first body of troops to invade the sacred soil of that state. After the termination of its three-month service practically all of the members of the National Rifles were tendered commissioned officers' places in the volunteer military service and many accepted the same. After three months' service the company was mustered out and Capt. Smead, its commanding officer, was assigned to duty as captain of Battery K, 5th United States Artillery. He was killed in action at the second battle of Bull Run, Va. From the ranks of the National Rifles in 1861, numbering sixty-five officers and men, commissions were issued to twenty-eight of its members early in the civil war, who before its close reached the following grades in the United States service: One major general of volunteers, two brigadier generals, regular and volunteers; one colonel, volunteer army five lieutenant colonels, regular and volunteers; three lieutenants, regular and volunteers; three lieutenants of the Potomac; one assistant engineer, United States Navy The office, Lieut Charles P. It became well known as a famous drill organization and won many trophies on competitive drill fields in various parts of the United States, and to the time of its disbandment was the champion drill company of the District of Columbia. Its social functions always were liberally patronized by the best and most refined element of the people of the National Capital, and its membership embraced only those whose character and standing in the community represented the very best type of our young citizenship, a large percentage of whom, today, are prominent residents and leading professional and business men and most useful citizens.

CONTROLLER TURNS BACK ADMIRAL USHER'S BILL

Government Not Responsible for Expense Incurred in Employment of Civilian Nurses.

Rear Admiral Usher must bear the ex pense of the services of two civilian amounting to as much as $486 bills contracted when he was lying critically ill of typhoid fever in his quarters, the commandant's house at the Norfolk navy yard. The law does not warrant reimbursement, it is ruled by George E Downey, controller of the Treasury.

Admiral Usher, as commandant of the navy yard, had authority over the naval tal. His request for attendance from the corps of nurses attached to the nospital did not meet with compliance because, as stated in the reference, the services of all the nurses were required at the navy hospital buildings. He engaged two civilian nurses, Miss Downes, to whom he paid $218, and Miss de Lancey, who received $268.

The government maintain

Lancey, who received $268.

The government maintains a corps of nurses for naval services, Controller Downey recites in his decision, and Congress has provided in specific terms the method of their appointment, by the surgeon general, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy. No other method of appointment or employment is provided in law.

Therefore the controller of the Treasury is of opinion that Admiral Usher was without authority to employ nurses in other than a private capacity, and that there is no appropriation from which he may be reimbursed for the expenditure incurred.

THE BRITISH CRISIS.

XXV.—A Military Estimate.

By Frederic J. Haskin.

BELFAST, May 29 .- The estimate of the present situation in Ulster from a military viewpoint may not be uninteresting to American readers, the more especially since the average military man here turns to American history for his emparisons and proofs. The whole of this letter is devoted to a transcription of views of several English and Irish military men in Ulster, preserving their own peculiar outlook, for which I am in nowise responsible.

The student of military affairs sees in the Ulster volunteer force certain facts to which the party politician is blind, and in these facts the soldier realizes the grave danger of the present situation. No British officer is permitted to enter Possible Defeats. the Virginians lost in the war. It is useless to point out that good fighting men are grown also in Leinster and Munster and Connaught, where they do want home rule. It is just as useless as it would have been in Virginia in 1861 to talk about the fighting qualities of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania.

The Ulster volunteer believes, and his military commanders believe, that he is worth from two to a dozen other men. Such beliefs may sometimes be justified, but even then they are dangerous if the Possible Defeats. the Virginians lost in the war. It is other side has the advantage in the proportion of two or a dozen to one.

What the military man here points out is that it doesn't matter which side wins, it is the terrific cost of civil war that the government must reckon with if it persists in its home rule program despite Ulster's warnings and threats. (He says nothing of what the nationalist volunteers might do if home rule were ditched.)

How earnest is the purpose of the men of both sides is recognized, however, by such military men as have been looking over the situation in those Ulster countles where the sentiment is divided, and where both Ulster and nationalist volunteers are drilling. In Londonderry city, for instance, there are over 3,000 Ulstermen and nearly 2,500 nationalists in the ranks. How to keep down a premature outbreak between these two forces is the constant care of the civil authorities.

As a part of this preparation he is told to read Col. Henderson's "Life of Stonewall Jackson."

In the introduction to that volume, written by Lord Wolseley, there are passages showing a complete analogy between the situation in Virginia in 1861 and that in Ulster today. It is pointed out that the famous "Stonewall Brigade" of the Shenandoah valley was largely of Scotch-Irish blood, the very blood of Ulster.
